CSU Dominguez Hills: Serving the Los Angeles Region

CSU Dominguez Hills serves approximately 17,000 students and graduates approximately 3,500 into the workforce each year.

A University for All Californians

CSU Dominguez Hills' student body proudly reflects one of California's greatest strengths—its diversity.

The student body is 10.6% African American; 64% Hispanic; 6.6% White; 8% Asian; 0.2% Native Hawaiian/Other Pacific Islander; 0.1% American Indian/Alaska Native; 2.6% two or more races.

Improving Life in the Los Angeles Region

As the only public four-year university in the South Bay region of Los Angeles County, CSU Dominguez Hills serves as a critical academic, economic and cultural resource for the greater community. Through its relevant academic programs, the university plays a proactive role in shaping a competitive, well-qualified workforce that is vital to a thriving economy. CSU Dominguez Hills' positive impact can be measured not only by the more than 100,000 alumni who have successfully completed their degrees from the university, but also by what those individuals are doing with their education. CSU Dominguez Hills alumni are business leaders, creators, educators, entrepreneurs, working professionals, and public servants who value the importance of contributing in positive ways to their community, state and nation.

One-of-a-kind Degrees

- CSUDH's Orthotics and Prosthetics is one of only 12 accredited programs in the country producing O&P practitioners.
- CSUDH has the only Occupational Therapy master's program at a public university in Southern California. The 2018 passage of Assembly Bill 829 paves the way for CSUDH to become the first public university in the region to offer a Doctorate in Occupational Therapy.

Innovative Programs

- The CSUDH Center for Innovation in STEM Education is a leader in preparing the next generation of STEM educators.
- The Male Success Alliance is the first CSU program to focus on improving access, retention and graduation rates of boys and men of color.
- CSUDH has partnered with the Whitaker Peace & Development Initiative to create and implement a conflict resolution program in local K-8 schools.
